
For over a century, an old hymn has reminded the Church of who we are as Christians—the bride of Christ. Its third verse envisions the romance of our redemption:

Oh, I am my Beloved's, and my Beloved's mine.
He brings a poor, vile sinner into His house of wine.
I stand upon His merit, I own no other stand,
Not even where glory dwelleth, in Emmanuel's land.

The Church is a perfect, spotless bride, destined for glory. The “glory” of course, all comes from Christ. Fallen sinners on whom God has shed His grace, we are unlovely yet loved. “Dead in our trespasses and sins,” by nature we reject God and all He stands for, until He makes us new. Our Beloved gets all the credit for who we are.

During the weeks before Easter, we observe Lent. It's easy to think of Lent as a time to give up things we enjoy, almost as if enjoyment is somehow tainted. Lent is more a time of giving ourselves to Christ and becoming more His. It involves a close look at who we really are without Him. It means seeing the sin we still cling to, recognizing all He did to deliver us from it, then letting it go, so we can cling closer to the Savior.

The bride's amazement turned to awe as she considered how much her transformation cost her groom. He had entered her world at great personal risk. It wasn't a chance encounter. He came seeking her. Searching the infested back streets, he suffered abuse, even wounds, from their seedy inhabitants, until he found her.

He loved her so much when she was so awful! The contrast between his unrelenting love and her absolute unloveliness filled her with joy and love beyond expression. Inwardly, she gave herself to him completely and prepared to walk down the aisle.

In verse four, the old hymn captures a moment yet to be in the romance of our redemption—the moment we go to be with our Beloved forever.

The bride eyes not her garment, but her dear bridegroom's face.
I will not gaze at glory, but on my Prince of Grace.
Not at the crown he giveth but on His pierced hand.
The Lamb is all the glory in Emmanuel's land.

Remember who you are without Christ. Let Him guide you to those sins that need attention and show you what you need to release, so you can be free to cling to Him.

I am my beloved's and my beloved is mine. –Song of Solomon 6:3

The Romance of Redemption

The bride sat gazing in the mirror, amazed. “This is how he sees me.” She looked at the reflection of a young woman in the bloom of adult beauty. Wavy locks cascading down her shoulders framed a frank, intelligent brow. Clear, radiant eyes peered out, inviting cheerful interaction. The skin on her face, shoulders and arms was creamy smooth, without blemish. Her beauty was a gift to others. It added to the world's beauty, without calling attention to her—which made her all the more beautiful. How different from before.

The image in the mirror, she knew, had been transformed. She needed no “before” photographs to see the difference. He had found her in an alley, abandoned by her “friends.” Brown, purple, and blue tracks in her left arm encircled the red and bleeding one that led to her deadly stupor. She had just enough strength to hit him and lash out with a burst of profanity. She called for her friends who had left her to die. She wanted their company, not his.

How she hated respectable people, with their clean clothes and orderly lives, who looked down on the way she earned the money to support her habit. Good friends were those who didn't condemn. Who understood that the only thing that mattered was a good time and a good high. Everything else took too much effort and gave no thrill. Her old friends understood.

But they didn't care. They had left her to die in the alley, afraid of the body. Afraid to be caught with a corpse. Of course they didn't realize that, like her, they were just corpses in waiting. Every thrill took them one step closer to death. Still, the thrill held them as slaves. They liked the way they were. They didn't want to change. She didn't want to change.

He had changed her. He resuscitated her back to life, then lifting her drooping, wilting, body from the asphalt, he took her out of that place, to his own home. He nursed her to health, fed her real food and healthy drink. Got her past the withdrawals to the solid ground of health and vitality. Now they took walks together in the afternoons and had conversations in the evenings. Her days were filled with visits from smiling friends who fed on life, which seemed to flow into her.

The beauty she saw in the mirror—he had put it there. She was new. He loved her for who he had made her. She would never forget who she had been and who was responsible for who she now was.
