

has allowed this evil to happen to him. While he submits to God's sovereignty and accepts his fate, God makes no sense to him. How can He allow a righteous man to suffer punishment he doesn't deserve?

At first, Job wishes he were dead (3:11). Then he desires to argue with God (13:3). He doesn't deserve this punishment! But who can win an argument with Almighty God (9:2-3)? Eventually Job seeks an advocate—a "go'el" or kinsman who will defend his cause before his Maker. Finally, he admits that no one has the wisdom to understand God's ways, but he determines to fear Him anyway (ch. 28). He longs for the days when he enjoyed God's blessing (ch. 29), mourns his fate (ch. 30), and asserts that he doesn't deserve such suffering (ch. 31).

Next comes young Elihu, who wants to defend God (chs. 32-37). He would be safer defending a lion, but God uses this brash youth to suggest that He might be trying to teach Job something. Elihu introduces the idea that God's purpose in what He allows to happen in our lives goes beyond simple punishment and reward.

Finally, God speaks to Job out of a whirlwind (Job 38-41), and His awesome presence and unanswerable questions put Job to silence. The God who created the universe and superintends every detail of life on earth knows what He is doing and answers to no one. Job has no way to comprehend creation, much less the Creator Himself. Job admits that he has no basis for accusing God of injustice.

But Job is innocent of great sin, and God loves to bless His children. In the end (Job 42), God vindicates Job before his friends, who tried to confine their Maker within the limits of their limited human understanding. Then He gave back to Job twice as much as he had lost.

The only way to enjoy fellowship with God is trusting obedience (Romans 12:1-2). He willingly listens to our complaints and cares about our concerns, but the One who made us and sent a Redeemer to save us is under no obligation to explain His ways. No, all is not right with the world as it is, but one day it will be. Our God still reigns.

Bible Reading Plan and Prayer Guide

(Year ONE) September 2019

I know that my Redeemer lives, and at the last, He will take His stand on the earth. Whom I myself shall behold, and whom my eyes will see and not another.

—Job 19:25, 27

The Wisdom of God

The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom (Proverbs 1:9). All the narratives of Israel's history show the good that comes from reverent obedience to God and the ruin that disobedience brings. But like Israel, we live in a world beset by sin that bears scant resemblance to the holy, loving God who superintends it. How can a righteous God preside over a world where the good often suffer and the wicked prosper? The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, but not the end of it. That's where Job comes in.

As humans created in God's image, we understand the main principles of His justice, but not sufficiently to make sense of all His actions in this world. In fact, as sinful human beings, we are tempted to put God on trial and find Him wanting. And the adversary Satan does the same thing.

As the book of Job opens, Satan stands before God, challenging the way He deals with humanity (1:9-11; 2:4-5). He accuses God of rewarding people like Job to purchase their affection and get them to do what He wants. To the devil, God is not just but manipulative, arbitrarily blessing some to buy their allegiance. Job is not truly righteous. He only obeys God to stay on His good side and enjoy His blessings. God uses Job as "exhibit A" in the case for His justice (1:8; 2:3). In the end, though Job loses everything, he remains faithful, proving the accuser wrong (2:10). Notice also that Satan is under God's complete control (1:10, 12; 2:7). He wants to harm Job in any way he can, but he can do nothing God doesn't permit. Satan is on God's leash. Still, Job struggles with what God allows in his life.

Enter Job's friends. Job and his friends all share a simple understanding of God's justice. He punishes the wicked (4:7-8; 9:2) and rewards the righteous (5:17-22). The greater the sin, the greater the punishment. Job is suffering greatly, so God must be punishing him for a great sin. It's as simple as that. According to his friends, all Job has to do to regain God's blessing is repent from the great sin he committed (8:21-22). All three friends try three times to convince Job to repent so God will bless him (Job 4-25).

But Job knows he has been faithful to God and cannot comprehend why God
